In our leadership roles, we don't often have much time to stop and reflect, to think about the impact and legacy of our approaches. We are busy doing good things, all too often forgetting to consider the source and shape of our own leadership.

One way of thinking about leadership is to see it as ultimately enabling the growth and flourishing of others, ourselves and our organisations. This view requires us to consider a range of fundamental 'how' questions?

- ❖ How can we learn to lead in the way we were born to lead?
- ❖ How can we lead in a way that reflects the ethos of our organisations?
- ❖ How can we nourish and sustain the leadership of others?
- ❖ How can we nourish and sustain our own leadership?
- ❖ How can we create and sustain organisations that deliver great outcomes while being places of wholeness and nurture for staff?

Who is this event for?

- ◆ Leaders who are established in their roles and who welcome an opportunity to pause and consider their legacy
- ◆ Those experiencing some moments of uncertainty about and within their own leadership
- ◆ Leaders who are looking for peer led support and challenge that further enables their own uniqueness in leadership
- ◆ Emerging leaders stretching and developing into new roles

We have called the event the Natural Leadership event; it builds on the premise that our leadership comes from within and has its source at the very core of our being. It acknowledges that as in the natural order of things Leadership can be nurtured and developed as well as be damaged and dismissed by the wide ranging experiences of life.

The event will incorporate a range of approaches and will involve working with and through nature, taking time for individual reflection and silence, engaging in action learning as well as more traditional group work. The event will be a collaborative event shaped by participants and facilitated by Rob Husband and Andy Howie

The dates for this event are to be confirmed - please contact us for details
